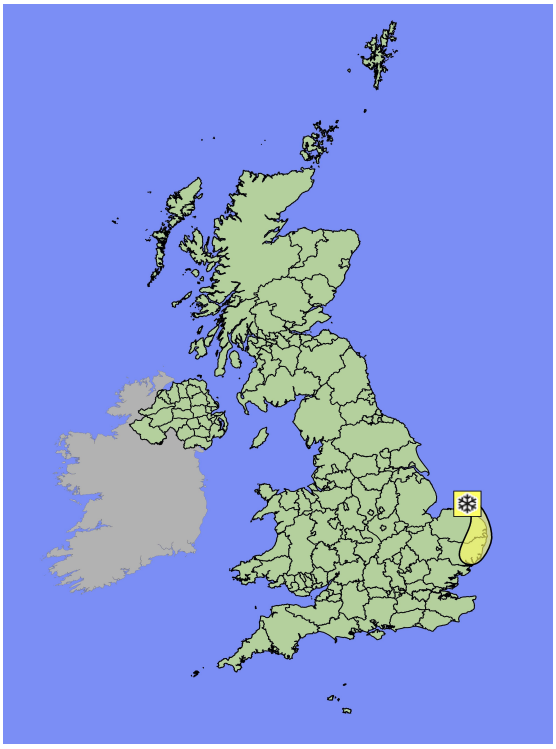
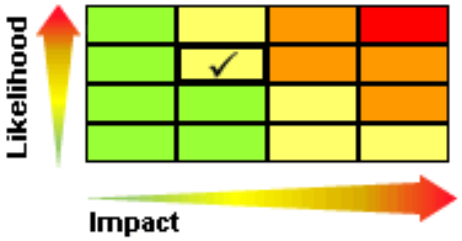
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Wintry showers have been affecting parts of the coast through this afternoon, but they are expected to move further inland this evening, turning readily to snow. The showers will be slow moving at first, so there is the risk of 2-5 cm of snow falling very locally within 2 hours, particularly close to the coast.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 18:00 on Thu, 17th Jan 2013 until 23:55 on Thu, 17th Jan 2013

Snow showers will move slowly westwards from the North Sea into eastern parts of Norfolk and Suffolk through this evening, giving local accumulations of 5 cm of fresh snow.

The public are advised of the continuing risk of some disruption to travel.
